

Bridging the gap between faith and work

“Where Two or Three Come Together”

“For where two or three come together in my name, there am I with them.” (Matt 18:20)

We are in a season of more work than at any time I can remember at WorkMatters. How about your world? September represents the end of vacations, the beginning of school and football, and the final push to finish the year strong at work.

As I left the office late one night recently, I thought about how special the one hour small group meeting was that we had earlier that morning. Just sitting in a conference room with a few co-workers, talking, laughing and having some deep prayer for the concerns of our work and personal lives.

Do you have a group like that? A place, a time, during the work week where two or three come together in His name, to encourage one another? It made such a difference as I navigated through my busy day.

A Work Prayer

Father, help me find others in my office who also want to walk out their faith in the workplace. Open the hearts of our company to allow us to meet together and help us find a time each week that we can meet. Guide our steps as we encourage one another through Your Word, through prayer, and through mutual support. Amen
